Daniel Buren Exhibition

February 2013

The work of conceptual artist Daniel Buren is currently on view in two New York galleries. Buren is well known for his repeating stripe patterns, which he has painted on canvas, printed on street posters, and used to cover gallery and museum walls. By appearing in and out of traditional art venues, and making use of mechanically reproduced patterns, his work has questioned everything from high modernist abstraction to the institutional authority of the museum or gallery.

According to the Bortolami Gallery press release, “plexiglas and fabric situated works and a room of new fiber optics [will be shown at Bortolami]. Daniel Buren realized these situated works with the textile company Brochier Soieries, using their innovative fiber optic technology for luminescent textiles. Petzel Gallery will showcase historical in situ works made with paper which the artist began in 1968.”

“Electricity Fabric Paint Paper Vinyl” is currently on display at Bortolami Gallery at 520 West 20th Street and Petzel Gallery at its new location, 456 West 18th Street. For more information please go to the galleries’ websites at <http://www.bortolami-gallery.com/> and <http://www.petzel.com/>
